Objective of the programme:

The main objective of "hands on training" programme is the transfer of scientific knowledge among the villagers and thereby enable them financially independent. The institution has taken such initiative for nearby community specially for underprivileged and unemployed residents. It was an effort which was organized by the initiative of incubation cell. As the incubation cell is in the developing process of "incubation centre" within college campus we have already thinking over a parallel programme like "hands on training". Gradually our purpose is to organize more such programmes mainly to motivate and train interested and needy villagers to by extending our hands and sharing our scientific knowledge with them. To make it practically feasible we have chosen our adopted "Abhor Village". The programme was well coordinated by the Dr. Kamala Rani Bhattacharyya.

Summary of the programme:

1. Welcome Address: The programme was kicked off with a welcome address delivered by the Dr. Chandan Roy, Principal, highlighting the importance of practicing cleanliness and maintenance.
2. Self-introduction by villagers: Eight villagers actively participated in this program. They introduced themselves.
3. Demonstration on mushroom cultivation at home: A brief demonstration on different types of mushrooms, distinguishing characters of poisonous vs non-poisonous mushroom was ensued. Mushroom cultivation techniques were discussed in details, simple set-up for mushroom cultivation at home was then projected.
4. Demonstration on organic manure manufacture at the backyard: A brief demonstration on how to manage domestic wastes and out of that how organic manures can be manufactured simply by dumping the biodegradable wastes into the pit was discussed.
5. Demonstration on phenyl preparation at home: Phenyl preparation protocol was discussed.

Programme Outcome:

The participants learnt how to contribute in sustainable development and aid in building up clean and green environment, can effectively manage domestic wastes and manufacture bio-compost from them at the backyard. They learnt about organic farming, mushroom culture techniques, phenyl preparation. This initiative may help them to earn extra money without any high capital investment.

Conclusion:

The programme was organized by Botany, Zoology, and Chemistry departments in collaboration with incubation cell under innovative ecosystem, RSM. They served as a commendable effort towards promoting environmental stewardship among participants. It not only disseminates knowledge among the villagers but also instilled a sense of ecological responsibility among the participants, emphasizing the importance of sustainable living.
